Online Master of Forest Business and Investment (FBI)

The Auburn University Forest Business and Investment (FBI) Master of Science online degree program is designed for forestry and non-forestry professionals who are seeking business, finance, and investment expertise specific to the forest industry.

Collaboratively taught with Auburn University's Raymond J. Harbert College of Business, this non-thesis master's program enables non-traditional students in Alabama and beyond to conveniently acquire these specialized skills from a top-ranking university with minimal disruption to their home life and current employment.

The degree requires 31 credit hours, 16 to 19 from the degree core and an additional 12 to 15 elective credit hours chosen from curricula such as finance, business administration, supply chain management, accounting, and agricultural economics.

While earning their degree, students can also advance their careers with a professional graduate certificate in forest finance and investment or supply chain management with a combination of four of the required supply chain and business courses.
